THE TECH BRO DICTIONARY: A CONTROLLED VOCABULARY FOR INEVITABLE FUTURES

Prepared by the Committee for Semantic Inflation and Predictive Terminology (CSIPT)
Revision 1.0 (Pre-Obsolescence Edition)

★ EXECUTIVE SUMMARY ★

This document establishes a standardized dual-definition framework for terminology frequently deployed by Technology Executives, AI Founders, Venture Futurists, and Podcast-Based Economists (hereafter collectively referred to as "Tech Sages").

The objective is to reconcile discrepancies between Oxford Dictionary definitions (Reality Layer) and Tech Sage definitions (Funding Layer). The Committee has determined that many critical terms no longer share semantic continuity across these layers, resulting in widespread confusion, speculative hiring freezes, and PowerPoint-induced labor market volatility.

This dictionary therefore provides an official translation framework to enable policymakers, workers, and confused relatives to interpret Tech Sage statements without experiencing semantic whiplash.

★ METHODOLOGY ★

Terms were collected from:

- Podcast transcripts
- Conference keynote presentations
- Venture capital pitch decks
- Tweets containing the phrase "we're not talking about this enough"
- Panels titled "The Future of Everything"
- Statements beginning with "People don't realize..."

Each term was analyzed using the Semantic Divergence Index (SDI), defined as:

$$\text{SDI} = \frac{(\text{Amount of Funding Raised Using the Word})}{(\text{Amount the Speaker Can Actually Define It})}$$

Terms with SDI > 10 were classified as Category A: Critical Buzzwords and included in this document.

★ CONCLUDING STATEMENT ★

After extensive study, the Committee concludes that Tech Sages are not misusing words; rather, words are failing to scale.

Language, like all legacy systems, must be updated, monetized, and possibly pivoted to enterprise. Accordingly, the Committee recommends that reality adopt the Tech Sage definitions immediately in order to avoid further confusion. Failure to do so may delay the future.
