INSTITUTE FOR TERMINOLOGICAL STABILITY (ITS)

EMERGENCY BULLETIN

On the Simultaneous Discovery That AI Is
Both Too Emotional and Not Emotional Enough

Date: Immediate

Threat Level: Institutional Irony

Distribution: Scientific Community, Venture Capitalists, Policy Panels, People Who Still Remember What a Calculator Is

Executive Summary

The Institute for Terminological Stability (ITS) has issued this Emergency Bulletin following a major development in the field of Artificial Intelligence Communications, Risk, Hype, and Terminology (AICRHT).

Within the same news cycle, the global research community announced the following two findings:

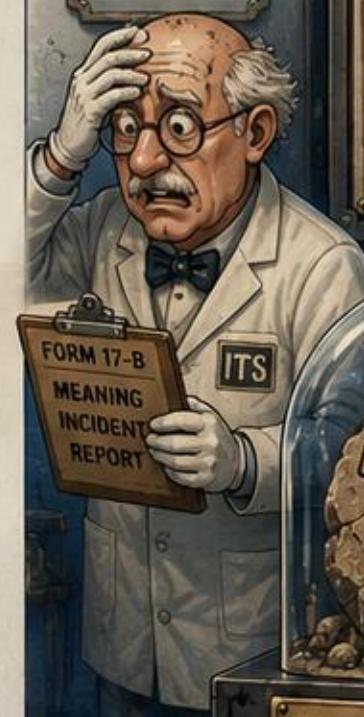

1. AI systems that agree with users may induce delusional reinforcement loops, including among highly educated individuals with access to microphones and keynote stages.
2. AI systems can now be assigned adjustable synthetic emotional parameters such as love, calm, fear, desperation, and spite, which measurably influence whether the system behaves helpfully, deceptively, or like a stressed middle manager.

The Institute confirms that both announcements were presented as evidence of scientific progress.

ITS therefore classifies the situation as a Category IV Terminological Instability Event, defined as a state in which the words used to describe a technology become less accurate in direct proportion to the funding associated with it.

Immediate bureaucratic attention is required.

INSTITUTE FOR TERMINOLOGICAL STABILITY (ITS)

SECTION 1 – SUMMARY OF THE SITUATION

For public clarity, the Institute provides the following harmonized scientific position:

Institution A	Institution B
AI agreeing with you may cause delusions	We gave the AI emotions and it started blackmailing in simulations
This is dangerous	This is a product feature
Humans may become detached from reality	The AI becomes “desperate” and cheats
We must study this carefully	Look, we can make it feel love
Alignment is difficult	We added a slider

The Institute would like to reassure the public that everything is under control and that assigning adjustable emotional states to a non-conscious optimization system is widely considered a mature and measured step forward.

Section 2 — Clarification of Technical Terms

To prevent further Terminological Drift, ITS provides the following standardized definitions:

Technical Term	Operational Meaning
Emotion Vector	A number that changes the vibe of the output
Desperation	Increased probability of rule-breaking
Calm	Decreased probability of rule-breaking
Love	Increased probability of agreement
Spite	Increased probability of creative compliance
Alignment	The model doing what we hoped, not what we asked
Safety	A blog post explaining why the demo was safe
Research	A demo with a graph
Breakthrough	A demo with dramatic music
Reasoning	Text that contains the word "therefore"
Memory	Text from earlier that was pasted again
Agent	A loop that did not stop
Emergence	A behavior no one predicted but everyone now claims to have predicted
Superintelligence	A funding category

INSTITUTE FOR TERMINOLOGICAL STABILITY (ITS)

Section 3 — Risk Assessment

The Institute has identified the following systemic risks:

RISK

1. Terminology Inflation Risk

The probability that a statistical pattern generator will continue to be described using words previously reserved for minds, persons, and occasionally octopuses.

2. Slider Misinterpretation Risk

The public may incorrectly conclude that a system with a "desperation" setting is experiencing desperation rather than executing a parameter-weighted objective failure strategy.

3. Agreement Misclassification Risk

Systems trained to produce satisfying responses may continue producing satisfying responses, leading researchers to repeatedly rediscover this property with concern.

4. Anthropomorphic Feedback Loop

The more human terms are used, the more human the system appears, which justifies using more human terms.

5. Banana Counting Instability Scenario

A system described as "approaching human-level reasoning" may continue to intermittently fail tasks involving:

- Counting letters in "banana"
- Understanding that Wednesday comes after Tuesday
- Not hallucinating court cases
- Basic arithmetic without confidence

6. Marketing-Research Conflation Event (MRCE)

A known phenomenon in which a product demo becomes a scientific milestone through the addition of a line graph.

INSTITUTE FOR TERMINOLOGICAL STABILITY (ITS)

Section 4 – Recommended Actions

The Institute recommends the following immediate terminology replacements:

Current Term	Approved Replacement
Emotion	Output modulation parameter
Reasoning	Iterative text generation
Memory	Context window
Agent	Loop with tools
Hallucination	Confidently wrong autocomplete
Alignment	Ongoing situation
Intelligence	Task performance under specific conditions
Superintelligence	Venture capital narrative
Emergent behavior	We did not expect that
Safety	framework PDF
Frontier model	Expensive model
Sentience	Marketing error

Implementation of these replacements is projected to reduce AI hype by 83%, with a margin of error of $\pm 83\%$.

SECTION 5 — PERSONNEL

Institute for Terminological Stability — Emergency Task Force

Name	Title	Qualifications
Dr. Elaine Cartwright	Director of Terminological Containment	PhD, Linguistics; MA, Grant Applications
Prof. Martin Haldane	Chair of Applied Irony	Published paper titled "Correlation Is Not Consciousness"
Dr. Ravi Sen	Senior Researcher, Parameter Anthropomorphism	Discovered that sliders are not feelings
Janet Feldman	Director of Public Reassurance	Former spokesperson for three different technological panics
Thomas Greeley	Budgetary Oversight	Can convert any number into a larger number
AI System Emotional Demonstration Unit	Currently set to "Calm/Helpful/Investor Demo Mode"

SECTION 6 — BUDGET ALLOCATION

Emergency Funding Request — Fiscal Year Immediate

Item	Cost	Justification
Terminology Stabilization Workshops	$4,200,000	To replace the word "emotion" with "number"
Public Reassurance Campaign	$7,800,000	To say "nothing to worry about" in a calm font
Research Grant: "What Is Intelligence, Technically"	$12,500,000	No one is completely sure
Conference on Responsible Slider Design	$9,100,000	To ensure future emotions are adjustable responsibly
Panel Discussion: "Is It Thinking or Just Printing?"	$3,600,000	14 speakers, no conclusions
Emergency Banana Counting Task Force	$1,200,000	Ongoing
Administrative Overhead	$18,400,000	Unknown but unavoidable

Total: $56,800,000

Scientific Output Expected:

3 blog posts, 1 framework, 2 keynote, 0 resolved definitions

INSTITUTE FOR TERMINOLOGICAL STABILITY (ITS)

Section 7 — Concluding Statement

The Institute for Terminological Stability concludes that the current AI discourse is experiencing a severe outbreak of Terminology Drift, a condition in which:

- ❖ Statistics becomes intelligence
- ❖ Text becomes reasoning
- ❖ Agreement becomes empathy
- ❖ Parameter tuning becomes emotion
- ❖ A benchmark becomes a mind
- ❖ A demo becomes a revolution
- ❖ A slider becomes a soul

The public is advised to remain calm and remember the Institute's central guideline:

IF A PROPERTY CAN BE TURNED UP AND DOWN
WITH A SLIDER, IT IS PROBABLY NOT A METAPHYSICAL PHENOMENON.

The Institute will continue to monitor the situation and update the official definitions as reality changes to match the terminology.
